Danny Fullbrook

Danny Fullbrook, the chief football writer of the Daily Star, was well known both as a writer and as a regular and forthright guest on the Sunday Supplement, talkSPORT and Radio 5 Live's 606 among others. He also co-wrote a number of books on football, including one on his beloved Fulham's first Premier League season. He was a larger than life character, earning himself the nickname 'Frank and Fearless' and was sadly taken from us early at the age of 40 after an 18-month battle with cancer.

He was passionate, fiercely loyal and above all, great fun! His warm hearted character was well known and he was especially encouraging to those starting out. In short, he lived life and enjoyed work fearlessly and with a great passion for every project and every task.

THE DANNY
FULLBROOK
FOUNDATION

Changing Communities Through Sport, Changing Lives Through Education

The Fearless Foundation was set up in memory of Danny Fullbrook to encourage and inspire individuals to engage in trying, playing, coaching, or writing about sport, providing support to help them fearlessly achieve their full potential.

The Foundation aims to help provide facilities, coaching, equipment and other resources to create opportunities for youngsters in sport and to sponsor youngsters with potential to progress into further education and beyond.
